Celsius' Thermometer is generally used in Europe. To convert degrees of Reaumur into Fahrenheit, above freezing point, multiply by $\frac{9}{4}$ and add 32; below multiply by $\frac{9}{4}$ and subtract from 32; thus: $17\text{ R} \times \frac{9}{4} = 38\frac{1}{4} + 32 = 70\frac{1}{4}$ F. of heat. $8\text{ R of cold} \times \frac{9}{4} = 18$; sub. from 32 = 14 F. of cold. To convert degrees of Celsius or Centigrade into those of Fahrenheit, multiply by $\frac{9}{5}$ and add 32 if above freezing-point and subtract from 32 if below freezing-point.

The table annexed will show at a glance the difference between the degrees Reaumur and Celsius with those of Fahrenheit.

Peking is the capital of the Republic of China, that vast country in Eastern Asia comprising five divisions:—Manchuria, Mongolia, Turkestan, Tibet, and China proper, the latter subdivided into eighteen lesser provinces, and constituting about one-third of the whole with a total area of 4,290,000 square miles, and a population of 400,000,000.

The present city stands on a site which has served since 1,200 years before the birth of Christ for many a former capital when China was one of the most important, if not the most advanced nation on the face of the globe. At that early period the city was called Chi and the Empire was under the Chang, historically recorded as the second dynasty which, with its twenty-eight successive rulers, controlled her destinies for six centuries. Seven centuries later, during the Cheon dynasty, the city became the capital of Yen, one of the many fractious, petty states of that unsettled period. Latter during the Tsin dynasty, the place was razed to the ground and utterly destroyed in the reign of Chin-Shih-Huang, about 211 B.C. Such, however, was the influence and tenacity of old Tartar adherents, that it was soon rebuilt, and gradually recovered its former position, retained up to the fourth century A.D., when it became the capital of a Tartar State. From this period the place was known by the name of Chi-Yuen or Yu-Chow, the chief city of a department, growing in magnitude and importance, until five centuries later it was besieged and captured by the Kitan Tartars, and during occupation chosen as their capital, but, at the same time, remaining an acknowledged dependency of the Chinese Empire. Two hundred years later the place was again in trouble, taken this time by the Chin Tartars and selected as their chief city, the name being changed to Chung-Tu or Yen-Ching. This dynasty was overthrown by the Mongols in 1215 A.D., and the city reduced to the grade of only a provincial town, but finally restored to its old time prestige of a capital by Kubai Khan, the grandson of Genghis Khan. This ruler gave it the name of Cambaluc, and built a wall round it 20 miles in circumference. It was also known as the City of the Khan, or, by the Chinese, as the Great Capital.

The many beautiful palaces distributed throughout its extensive area date back to this period of occupation by the Mongols. Marco Polo's visit occurred about this time, and his account of the reception accorded him sets forth the great splendour of the Court of Kublai Khan. Following this Imperial regime of the Great Kahn, the Ming dynasty came into power A.D. 1368, and at once removed the seat of administration to Nanking, a city situated on the Yangtze, some 130 miles from the sea, which then became the capital of the whole Empire. In 1409 the principal seat of Government was again transferred to the northern city, Peking, by the third Ming Emperor Yung loh, but Nanking was still recognised as the southern capital of the Empire. In 1419 the building of that mighty wall was commenced, which to-day surrounds the present Tartar City. The Manchu invasion took place in 1644, and that portion of the city within the big wall was given up to the victors composed of very mixed communities:—Manchus, Mongols, and not a few Chinese. These were arranged in eight divisions, distinguished from each other by banners, commonly known as Banners of State, the colours being plain white, yellow, blue, and red, and the same again with four distinctive borderings, making eight in all. The yellows were to reside in the northern quarter, the whites in the eastern, the reds in the western, and the blues in the southern.

These bannermen have nearly all been absorbed during the last fifty years, intermarrying with the Chinese. It is almost impossible to discern a Manchu from a Chinaman to-day, unless one is familiar with their distinctive characteristics; whereas, with women, the head dress alone is quite sufficient to settle the question at once, the hair being drawn tightly over a flat piece of wood which is made to stand well out at the sides above the head, usually decorated with fresh or imitation flowers. The Manchu language is seldom spoken, except in higher circles; but a mongrel dialect is still spoken amongst the lower classes.

The establishment of the Republic in Feb. 1912, brought forth a demand from some of the Southern Provinces that the capital be transferred to Nanking, but nothing came of it and to-day there seems little likelihood of any change being made.

Arrived at either of two central stations—the Peking-Hankow Line from the South or that of the Peking-Mukden Line from the north and east, their platforms separated only by the massive masonry curtain which protects the Imperial Entrance, the “Chien Men”—a sense of curious, unusual impressions is at once aroused. Such a huge pile is the heavily buttressed southern wall of the Tartar City, and so striking are the blendings of colour—vermilion purple, bice-green, orange and ultramarine—all in massive gold setting, used for the gaudy scroll and flower decorations of the towering square pagoda which surmounts the great archway. This one view alone, in contrast with the hurry-scurry of the apparent Lilliputian life in the streets below, becomes not a little confusing, at times almost overwhelming in its impressiveness. Nowhere else in the whole world can the same feelings arise such as are readily conjured up on making a first visit to this great Oriental capital, which stands to-day as a monument to an ancient high-imperialism despotic power that is no more.

The Four Cities of Peking.

The Tartar City (內城 Nei Cheng) may be considered as the former royal city, and therefore of much greater importance than the adjoining Chinese City common to every province of the Empire.

In the year 1904, when the Emperor Yung-loh, third of the Ming dynasty, who resigned successfully for twenty-two years, found his position on the throne secure, he transferred the seat of Government from Nanking in the south to Peking. Amongst the many improvements which belong to his reign are the designing and building of the Great Tartar City Wall, begun in 1914.

Measurements:—Height, 40 feet; width at base, 62 feet; length, 13 English miles.

The north and south walls are about $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles long, the east and west somewhat less, enclosing altogether an area of approximately ten square miles. All main thoroughfares are very wide and run from north to south and from east to west.

The Imperial City, (皇城 Hwang Cheng) in the centre of the Tartar City, occupies a space area of nearly two square miles, surrounded by a wall 20 feet high. There are four very spacious entrances, each with three gateways; the middle one, the royal entrance, was opened formerly only for the Emperor.

This city is in a much better state of preservation than any other part of Peking. It is the select quarter where many of the high officials live.

The Forbidden City (紫禁城 Tse Chin Cheng) with its massive pink-washed walls, 30 feet high by 30 feet thick at their base, is, again, in the centre of the Imperial City.

Laid out on a grand symmetrical scale and surrounded by a moat 120 feet wide, the actual space covered is about half a square mile. Within are many royal palaces, apartments for visitors, Government Offices, and the necessary appointments for an enormous retinue of domestics of various grades, the grounds being fantastically laid in marble terraces protected by balustrades, with ornamental waters and gardens in miniature landscape style.

In the corners of this strikingly picturesque enclosure are four octagon pavilions with double roofs in the usual Imperial yellow glazed tiles. A view of the upper part of these pavilions can be obtained from outside the walls. There are four gateways, the one in the south, the Wu-Men, forming the principal entrance leading to the Tai-Ho-Men, which opens into the grand marble paved quadrangle containing the Grand Palace (Tai-Ho-Tien) or Hall of Highest Peace. Here also is the Grand Reception Hall and Throne, where nearly two centuries ago the Emperor Chien-lung received foreign potentates. This is the palace where royal functions were celebrated annually when the princes and nobles of the Empire made their obeisance to the Emperor, offering seasonable congratulations and good wishes for the incoming New Year.

The Chinese City (南城 Nan Cheng) little worthy of special mention, is situated to the south of the Tartar City, the southern wall of that city forming its northern boundary. The east, west and south walls were built by the Emperor Chiaching XII., Emperor of the Ming dynasty, and the original intention was to continue these walls round the Tartar City with a total length of 40 miles; but this scheme fell through on account of the ruinous cost. The Chinese City is about two-thirds of a mile broader than the Tartar City, and there is a gateway in each of its northern corners.

The Great Chien Men Street, the principal thoroughfare, leading direct to the Yung-Ting-Men (South Gate) is very wide, running in a southerly direction from the Imperial Gateway in the Tartar City wall. Towards the end of this street will be seen the park-like enclosures of the Temple of Heaven on the left, and the Hall of Agriculture on the right.

The British Legation calls for special mention, as it was within this compound the European population took refuge during the Boxer trouble. The main entrance is in Canal Street, originally the site of a palace occupied by one of the Princes of the blood. After the conclusion of peace at the end of the campaign 1857-1861, when, by the terms of the Peace it was agreed that Foreign Legations should henceforth be established within the Tartar City, the place was set apart for the British Minister and his secretaries, &c. Being surrounded by a high and fairly substantial wall, the Legation has from time to time served as a place of general rendezvous in times of impending trouble. In 1900 nearly all the Europeans, also large numbers of native converts, sought refuge within its walls, where they were forced to remain under a state of siege for nearly two months. The Chapel in the Legation grounds is well worth a visit, service being held there every Sunday.

Description of Places

Enumerated in the Programme of Sightseeing in Peking.

1. The South Wall of the Tartar City can be approached by a sloping roadway to the right hand of the Water Gate situated at the end of Canal Street, a few minutes from Legation Street. The early morning is the best time for this trip, as the atmosphere is then both cool and clear.

A walk on the wall to the right as far as the Chien Men Gate is recommended, as from that point, to the north, a grand view over the Imperial and Forbidden Cities is obtainable, while to the south the finest prospect of the busy Chinese City forms the landscape.

2. Hata-Men Street crosses the eastern end of Legation Street, about ten minutes walk from Canal Street. It is a fine broad thoroughfare, nearly three miles in length, terminating at the north wall. There are many memorial arches erected on this street.

3. Wai-chiao-pu, (formerly the Wai-wu-pu or Tsung-li Yamen, Foreign Office) is some two hundred yards further up on a side street to the right. There is little of interest in this institution beyond the fact that it represents the medium of official communication with the outside world.

4. The Astronomical Observatory (觀象臺) (Kwan Hsiang Tai) will be seen on the wall a considerable distance to the right from the Foreign Office, although many of the larger instruments were looted by the relief force in 1900. This institution was founded by the Jesuit Fathers in the Thirteenth Century, but not until the Seventeenth Century were the wonderful bronze castings produced by Verbiest at the order of the Emperor Kang-hsi. One of the principal, the azimuth, was presented by the King of France, Louis XIV. There are two bronze astrolabes in the courtyard not far from the sloping roadway leading on to the wall. The one to the left as you enter is very interesting, and quite attractive in design.

5. The site of the Old Examination Hall (貢院 Kung Yuen) can be overlooked from the City Wall to the left of the Observatory. Erected by the third Ming Emperor, Yung-loh, in the Fifteenth Century, there were the usual grand pavilions and spacious quadrangles with cells sufficient to accommodate ten thousand students. Here, in former days, the young intellect of the nation assembled periodically to undergo the test which secured the privilege of official appointment. That test was limited to producing an original essay on some given subject.

Throughout the eighteen provinces similar institutions will be found in all the capitals and many of the larger cities.

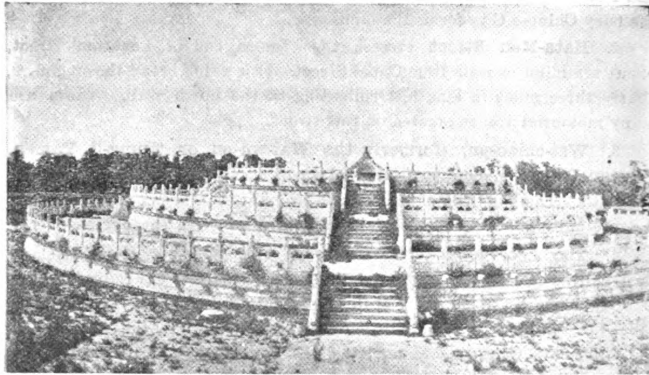

The former antiquated system of training may be held responsible in no small degree for the anti-foreign movement by the Boxers.

In 1900 a vast quantity of the brickwork was pulled down and transferred to the Legation quarter, where it was urgently needed to repair the depredations of the siege. It has recently been decided to make this the site of the new Parliament Buildings.

The Temple of Heaven.

6. The Temple of Heaven (天壇 Tien T'an) is by far the most beautiful, as it is the most important, of the many interesting places to be visited in Peking. Tradition points to a very ancient form of worship dating back to a period long anterior to Confucius and the introduction of Buddhism, and tells us that this monotheistic cult had its origin in prehistoric times; also that the present edifice, erected during the Ming dynasty by the second Emperor, Yung-loh, was finally set apart for the sacrificial worship and adoration of "Heaven."

TEMPLE OF HEAVEN

By this "Heaven," it must not be imagined there is any connection whatever with "Mansions in the Skies." The "Heaven" here intended is the Universe, the Mighty Realms of Space, the Wonders of the Firmament as presented in the day-time by the light of the sun and at night by the illumination of the moon and the planets, amidst myriads of minor constellations.

Hence, the simple worship and adoration of One Supreme Power, self-evident, which has existed with them from time immemorial; the gilded idols which adorn their temples being symbols in some form or other of the various attributes of that Supreme Being, serving only to occasionally remind them of His existence.

THE TEMPLE OF HEAVEN

This beautiful temple is situated at the south of the Chinese City, nearly two miles distant from the Tartar City, in a park-like enclosure beautifully shaded with fine old trees. The principal entrance to this park is on the left of the wide roadway known as the Chien Men, which leads directly from the Imperial Gateway of that name. To the ground of the temples there are five entrances—two in the western wall, two in the eastern wall, and one in the southern wall.

On the right, after having passed through the gateway leading to the temple grounds, is the Palace of Abstinence, enclosed within a high wall surrounded by a moat. It is quite a modern building and contains the usual paraphernalia of such institutions, besides a throne, and a wonderfully carved screen in variegated woodwork. The main feature, generally known as the Temple of Heaven, is situated some distance beyond to the left, and includes a beautiful triple-roofed circular building 90 feet high, erected in the centre of a marble altar used for prayers on behalf of the harvest. The pinnacle-shaped dome of this temple is covered with blue enamelled tiles executed by order of the Emperor Chien-lung a century and a half ago. Originally, each of the three roofs had its own colour in blue, yellow and green. Surmounting the pinnacle is a large round-topped cap thickly gilded in fine leaf gold, which, with the bright colour beneath, produces a spectacle in the landscape visible for many miles from all directions. Adjacent to this noble edifice is the Altar of Heaven, which is arranged in three terraces built of white marble—the lower one 210 feet wide, the one above 150 feet wide, and the upper terrace being 90 feet wide—ascended by 27 steps in three flights of 9 each, and having a large circular slab of white marble in the centre surrounded by nine smaller ones, and again encompassed by eighteen others, and so on, until the number eighty-one is attained—forming the Chinese lucky number.

All the circular balustrades which surround each of the three terraces are of white marble beautifully sculptured in cloud design. Of the dividing supports for the balustrades there are 180 on the lower terrace, 108 on the one above, and 72 on the upper terrace, adding up to 360, and corresponding with the degrees of a geometrical circle; the whole plan of the structure being worked out with mathematical exactness.

It was a long-established custom for the Emperors to worship at this temple three times during the current Chinese cycle; always at the close to render an account as to the progress of the passing year, a month later to pray for instructions as to the special duties required for the New Year, and then again in the Spring to ask the blessings of a bountiful harvest. The hours chosen for these ceremonies were generally before sunrise, but the whole night was spent in preparation at the Hall of Abstinence near by.

The most important of these ceremonials was celebrated during the winter when the sun had reached its solstitial point furthest south over the Tropic of Capricorn December 21st; on this day the Emperor, in his yellow Sedan chair with quite a number of bearers, attended by as many musicians playing on native instruments, and a large following on horseback—princes, nobles and big officials—repaired to the Temple of Heaven for worship. He first entered the Imperial Ancestral Temple situated in the centre of the enclosure where, with three supplications and nine prostrations, he offered incense to the deity Shang-ti (Supreme Ruler of the Universe) and to his ancestors. Proceeding then to the Grand Altar he inspected the sacrificial offerings, and went on directly to the Palace of Abstinence, where he spent the night fasting and in meditation.

In the early morning, robed in his sacrificial vestments, the Emperor proceeded to the open altar where he supplicated and burnt incense, offering another prayer to Shang-ti, and again presenting incense to his ancestors through the medium of their shrines and tablets, which were duly arranged in the northern quadrangles. The Altar of Heaven was then ascended, the all-important ceremony being performed on the upper terrace, the middle circular stone chosen for the purpose. Here the Emperor enjoyed the sacred solitude suggestive of the centre of the Universe, as from this place of kneeling he saw nothing beyond but the horizon.

There are no golden images connected with this particular form of worship, which is strictly Confucian, the only burnt offerings being from the animal, vegetable and mineral kingdoms, besides some specimens of hand-work in the shape of woven cloth and silk, which are consumed in urns used for that purpose.

Throughout the whole of this truly beautiful spot a profusion of horticultural display is to be found in every direction; the Chinese are so fond of floral decorations, and the effect in this instance is to give a living sanctity to the place quite in keeping with its remarkable traditions as the first and most important Temple in the Empire where the reigning Emperor was obliged to worship—The Temple of Heaven.

The Altar of Agriculture.

7. The Altar of Agriculture (先農壇 Hsin Nung T'an) is situated across the wide thoroughfare directly opposite to the Temple of Heaven. This shrine is dedicated to Shen Nung, supposed to be the first to introduce the cultivation of the soil scientifically and systematically. The enclosure is slightly smaller than that of the Temple of Heaven, but contains fine trees and good grass cultivation. There are four pavilions with their adjoining Altars to the Spirits of Heaven, Earth, the Cycle, and Ancestral Husbandmen.

8. Shopping—

Porcelain.—On either side of the Great Chien Men Street in the Chinese City will be found shops where modern porcelain in great variety is exposed for sale.

The porcelain of the present period is not nearly so fine as that produced during the Ming and earlier dynasties; still, there are many interesting souvenirs procurable at a moderate outlay.

The showrooms of some of these shops extend back for a considerable distance, and it is therefore best not to be in any hurry as to selection until you have inspected the whole stock.

Furs are to be seen in the Pan-pi-ching Street, off the Great Chien Men Street. Peking being a very cold place to reside in during the winter, the use of furs is general by all who can afford to purchase them. The buyers are mostly natives, and the make-up is to meet their particular wants. Where special garments are desired, they would have to be made to order, but the best plan is to select the "plates," a trade term (the size of a Chinese coat) fancied, and having seen them properly packed, send to a furrier at home. Variety:—Sable, minx, chinchilla, otter, squirrel, ermine, arctic fox, mongolian dog, astrachan, seals, and an assortment of mixed varieties of lesser value. Also larger skins, such as wolf, bear and deer.

Embroideries—(NOTE: Be sure that the piece selected is not too much soiled). Old embroideries are mostly collected from the numerous wardrobes which annually find their way into the pawnshops, and may be classed as an article upon which the purchaser is alone able to put a value according to the special circumstances of his appreciation. Care should be taken to see that the materials are not rotten through damp, also that one gets bona fide embroidery and not imitation, as a lot of fancy ribbons made in Europe are now used on garments in place of the real thing. In many cases the work has been cut from old garments and tacked or glued on to newer materials.

Modern embroideries are becoming a drug on the market—the over production is piling up so rapidly. To make a fortunate selection a fairly good light is necessary, otherwise it will be difficult to properly discern the arrangement and blending of colours. The designs are produced on silk, satin, and grass cloth—the latter very effective. This wonderful handicraft is a home industry distributed over the whole Empire, each district having its special character of design and colouring.

9. Curios are essentially all that the name implies, and are in all sorts of fantastic shapes and colourings, varying in size from a nut to a ten-foot trio of dragon bronzes valued at $5,000.

Curiosities of one sort or another are to be found in every Chinese city, and in many instances, where space admits, laid out on the ground; their vendor, some wizened-faced aged patriarch, taking his chance with the passers by. There are, besides, a number of smaller articles which to the visitor will prove very interesting as souvenirs, such as:—

Sets of chopsticks,	Packs of playing cards,
Box of dominoes,	Genteel purses,
Coolie purses,	White metal pipe,
Coolie water pipe,	Enamelled water pipe,
Genteel water pipe,	Embroidered sachets,
Embroidered spectacle cases,	Shoes, small footed,
Ladies' shoes, ordinary	Enamelled buttons, in sets,
Abacus counting board,	Painted fish bowls,
Peking snuff bottles,	Sets of mandarin buttons,
Brass padlocks,

Added to the above there are hosts of other articles in ivory, bone sandalwood, lacquer, feathers, grasswork, &c., too numerous to mention.

Lu-li-chang, (琉璃廠) the Great Curio District, is the best quarter to visit for all these small purchases.

Jadestone, also to be found in this neighbourhood, is a hard, compact and very tough stone, varying in colour from a creamy white to a rich dark green, slightly oily, and therefore not capable of retaining the brightest polish for any length of time. In selecting, one should choose that with most life or transparency in colour, and should specially guard against soapstone, which sometimes closely resembles in appearance real jade. Soapstone can be at once detected by its softness, the thumbnail will chip most specimens. Many devices, such as filling and polishing with wax and other compositions, are resorted to by the natives to make an imperfect specimen of jadestone pass muster.

10. The Lama Temple (雍和宮 Young Ho Kung) is connected with the Great Lamasery or Monastery of the Mongol branch of the Buddhist religion, the Shamanism, and has in residence about 1,500 lamas, or Mongol priests, divided into four classes.

The first in the majority occupies its time with the study of Nature.

The second with the Tibetan translation of the Tantras.

The third makes a study of the heavens and their supposed influence on the affairs of this earth.

The fourth the Chinese pharmacopœia and herbal drugs.

There are also a great number of Mongol lamas ruled over by a living Buddha from Lhasa.

This temple was formerly the palace of the son of Emperor Kang-hsi, of the Ming dynasty, who became the Emperor Yung ching. It is also the birth-place of his son again, a third Emperor Chun-lung. On the latter ascending the throne and becoming a great admirer of Buddhism, he presented this palace to the Lamas.

Two arches decorated with Imperial yellow enamelled tiles form the entrance, with a spacious paved passage leading up to the main gateway the dormitories and refectories of the lamas being on either side. About 9 a.m., the hour of Matins, great crowds of close-shaven priests in yellow vestments, attended by a large following of boys presented in their infancy to the temple, can be seen gathering from many directions.

In the next court are two enormous bronze fabulous lions, as curious as they are ugly.

Through another gateway a square stone monumental tablet is erected having four equal sides, each inscribed with the history of Lamaism in distinct script—Tibetan, Mongol, Chinese, and Manchu; placed immediately in front of this tablet is a bronze incense burner, 8 feet high.

On one of the walls will be seen a pictorial description of the Universe controlled by a huge monster of the dragon species having claws and three terrible eyes.

There are two prayer wheels in the building, and, in close proximity, the lamas can be distinctly heard chanting their service to the accompaniment of much tinkling of little bells.

11. The Temple of the Great Buddha (of the Future).—In the last court of the Lama Temple is a very lofty pavilion containing a colossal image of Buddha, 70 feet high, with several prayer wheels of extraordinary dimensions. This temple was occasionally visited by the Emperor, when the prayer wheels are set in motion, a light being placed in the head of the idol. Visitors can, if they so desire, on payment of a small fee, ascend to the top by a winding, though rather rough, staircase. In the lesser halls on the east side there are further groups of curious idols. There are also some fine specimens of old Cloisonné to be seen placed in front of some of the altars in this temple.

12. The Temple of Confucius (孔夫子廟 Kung Fu Tse Miao) is quite close to the Lama Temple, and, in contrast, most remarkable.

Confucius, the great Chinese philosopher and moral teacher, was born about 500 B.C., descended from the Imperial House of Shang, for a considerable period rulers of the Empire.

He selected from the many thousand converts to his teaching seventy-two disciples, whom he divided into four classes. The first, for the study of morals; the second, the art of reasoning; the third, jurisprudence and government; and the fourth, teaching and preaching according to his own tenets, which were well calculated to promote unity, peace and concord.

Entering the temple from the road, there are a number of monumental stone tablets in honour (their names recorded) of all who have taken the Third Degree at their Triennial Examinations during the last seven centuries. The three earliest records belong to the Mongol dynasty, seven centuries ago; nearly all the remainder to the Ming and Ta-tsing. Passing through the small opening which leads into the quadrangle of the grand pavilion, under a covered gateway are ten black stone drums, five on a side. These are relics of the Chou dynasty, 12-246 B.C., and have, therefore, been in their present state and use for more than 2,500 years.

There are neither idols nor priests connected with this temple, simply a small wooden tablet in a wooden shrine, which bears the following inscription in both Chinese and Manchu:—"The tablet of the soul of the most holy ancestral teacher, Confucius." The tablets of the four distinguished sages—Tseng-tse, Mencius, Yen hui and Tzu-szu—are placed two on each side. Six others of the school of Confucianists occupy a lower position also on either side. On the roof are seven handsome tablets in praise of Confucius. Each Emperor presented a new one in token of veneration for the sage. The inscriptions are all different, showing some distinct aspect of his influence. "Heaven and Earth," "Example and teacher all ages," &c.

At each side of the shrine in small closed receptacles are the sixteen tablets, inscribed with the Confucian precepts as follows:—

No. 1. Esteem most highly filial piety and brotherly submission, in order to give due prominence to the social relations.

No. 2. Behave with generosity to the branches of your kindred, in order to illustrate harmony and benignity.

No. 3. Cultivate peace and concord in your neighbourhood in order to prevent quarrels and litigations.

No. 4. Recognise the importance of husbandry and the culture of the mulberry-tree, in order to ensure a sufficiency of clothing and food.

No. 5. Show that you prize moderation and economy in order to prevent the lavish waste of your means.

No. 9. Exhibit clearly propriety and yielding courtesy, in order to make manners and customs good.

No. 10. Labour diligently at your proper callings, in order to give settlement to the aims of the people.

No. 11. Instruct sons and younger brothers, in order to prevent them from doing what is wrong.

No. 12. Put a stop to false accusations, in order to protect the honest and the good.

No. 13. Warn against sheltering deserters, in order to avoid being involved in their punishments.

No. 14. Promptly and fully pay your taxes, in order to avoid the urgent requisition of your quota.

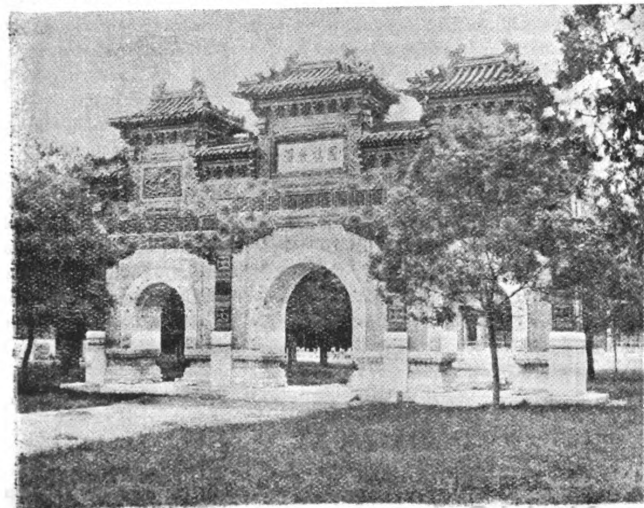

No. 15. Combine in hundreds and tithings, in order to put an end to thefts and robbery.

No. 16. Study to remove resentments and angry feelings in order to show the importance due to the person and life.

In the quadrangle between the main gateway and the grand pavilion are a number of fine old cypress trees planted many centuries ago, and, as if grafted, in the fork of one of these will also be noticed a sturdy elm of considerable size actually grown from a seedling. The range of buildings here on either side, contain the tablets of good and learned men, many of them former pupils of the sage—all followers of his teachings. This temple was founded during the Yuan dynasty, in the Thirteenth Century, the present edifice having been erected at a very much later period.

On the first and fifteenth of every moon and at certain festivals this ancient sage is worshipped with much solemnity by all the civil and military officers of the city.

13. The Hall of Classics (國子監 Kwo Tze Chien) is located to the west of the Temple of Confucius, originally intended as an educational institution in connection with the temple for the "Sons of the Empire." The main pavilion is rectangular, double-eaved and tiled with Imperial yellow enamelled tiles, its pinnacled roof surmounted by a golden globe. The courts are principally paved with marble, having a light carved balustrade, beyond which a moat encircles the whole.

HALL OF CLASSICS

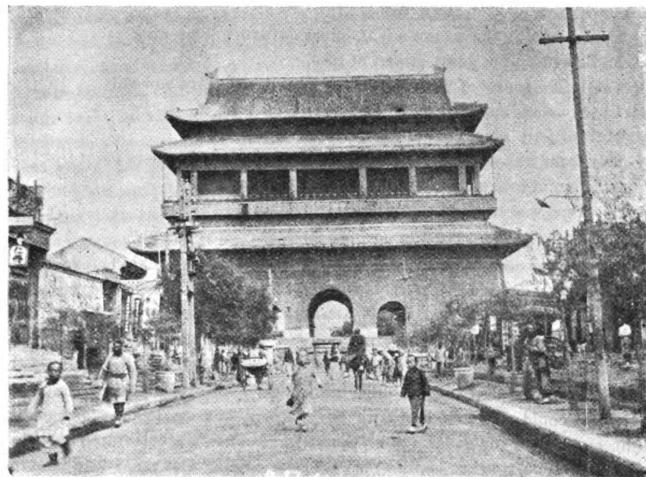

In the grand pavilion is a throne with pictorial "Screen of the Five Mountains" behind, and in the quadrangle to the south is a magnificent pailow of three portals constructed in Imperial yellow and bright green enamelled tiles relieved with white marble, a creation said to be the most attractive piece of decorative art in Peking.

In its true position to the north is a sundial from which the mean time is periodically corrected. On the east and west sides of the quadrangle are carefully stowed away in buildings intended for the purpose, several hundred stone tablets on which are finely engraved the complete text of the Four Books and the Five Classics. This curious precaution is taken against the possibility of these ancient relics being, in any way, destroyed, as happened once in the very early history of the Empire, when an Emperor, Chin-Shih-Huang, whose desire seems to have been that posterity should in no way be allowed to enjoy the privilege of reaping a benefit which might accrue from any records of past history, set to work to burn all the books and otherwise dispose of every trace of the Empire's literature. This was the same Emperor who started building the Great Wall of "seclusion" and "self delusion" some few centuries before the Christian Era.

The Hall of Classics is a most interesting place for all students of Chinese history to visit, as, also, for those interested in the peculiar Chinese architecture which in this building is elaborately exemplified.

The Drum and Bell Towers.

14. The Drum (鼓樓 Ku-Lo) and Bell (鐘樓 Chung-Lo) Towers.—The former is situated about half a mile from the Te-cheng-Men Gate, and, being nearly 100 feet high, can be seen from almost any part of the city. It belongs to the Mongol period.

DRUM TOWER

Originally there was a clepsydra in this Drum Tower for ascertaining the time of day, but this ancient system was superseded by the incense stick which burnt itself out in the period of the night-watch for which it was used. To-day a modern clock serves the purpose most accurately.

There is a very extensive view to be obtained from this tower, and the climb will well repay anyone who has the energy to make it.

To the north, the Bell Tower, with the Yellow Temple in the distance and the Great Parade Ground between. To the south, the broad roadway leading to the gate of the Imperial City, the view over the Imperial and part of the Forbidden Cities, with the western hills forming a background twenty miles away. To the east, the Tartar walls are the most prominent feature, and one of the best views is obtainable here, while to the west there is a considerable open space relieved by a shallow lake surrounded by willows with Prince Kung's Palace in the rear.

The Bell Tower, situated about 100 yards north of the Drum Tower, is nearly 100 feet in height, and contains a huge bell, said to weigh 120,000 lbs. This bell with four others was cast in the reign of the Emperor Yung-loh, Ming dynasty, Fifteenth Century. The tower was originally built in the Mongol period, and is supposed to have formed, approximately, the central edifice of their capital, Cam-bu-lu, the City of the Khan. It was long afterwards destroyed by fire, but re-built again in 1740, during the reign of the Emperor Chien-lung.

The dimensions of the bell are 18 feet in height by 10 feet wide at its greatest circumference, the walls of metal being 9 inches in thickness. It is one of the most interesting sights of the city and dates back to early mediæval times.

A Chinese Legend—The Casting of the Bell.

There is a somewhat sad but romantic native legend connected with the casting of the bell, a general translation which is here given.

The Emperor Yung-loh had amongst his Court Officials, the one Kwanyu, who from his skill and knowledge of the blending and fusing of metals, was commanded to make a casting of this particular bell. In his effort to obey the royal command, Kwanyu had twice failed; the mass, cooling too rapidly, had honeycombed, which made His Imperial Majesty furious with disappointment. Finally, as if the blame attached personally to Kwanyu himself, the Emperor is said to have threatened severe punishment, even to decapitation, if another failure occurred, which promised reward greatly perturbed the poor old official.

However, the story goes, Kwanyu had an only daughter, very beautiful, upon which all his future hopes in life were centred.

Her eyes were almond-shaped, like autumn ripples
Sparkling and dancing in the sun,
Which seem to leap for joy and wantonness
To kiss the swaying reeds that rim the river's bank—
Yet, of such limpid transparency, that in their liquid depths
One's form was seen as if reflected in a mirror—
Shaded by silken lashes now drooping in coy modesty,
Anon, rising in youthful mirth disclosing a joyous innocent glee
There concealed beneath them.

Eyebrows like the willow's leaf, cheeks of ivory whiteness
Mellowed by the gentlest tint of rose.
Teeth like pearls of purest water between ruby lips so ruddy,
Luscious and juicy, resembling full ripe cherries;
Hair of jetty blackness and silkiest texture.
Her form was such as poets love to dwell upon and artists paint;
An elegant grace and ease in every movement,
She appeared to glide rather than to walk.

So light was she of foot,

Add to her other charms that she was skilful in versemaking, excellent in embroidery, unequalled in the execution of household duties, and we have a faint description of the many attractions and virtues of Ko-ai, the beautiful daughter of Kwanyu.

Seeing plainly upon his face her father's hidden despair, she questioned him and told him that success must crown his efforts this time. She was a girl and could only help him with her prayers, but would pray earnestly night and day to the gods. She even went to consult a celebrated astrologer, and was horrified to be told that the next casting also must be a failure if the blood of a maiden were not mixed in the metal, yet she continued to cheer her father, and on the appointed day, told him she would go with him "to exult in his success," as she said, jestingly. There was an immense concourse of the Emperor's subjects to witness this third casting, which must result in the honour or death of Kwanyu. At a given signal, to the sound of music, the molten metal escaped its furnace ready for the huge mould prepared. Suddenly there was a shriek, a cry, "For my father's sake!" and the beautiful girl threw herself headlong into the seething mass of metal. Someone tried to seize her in the act, but succeeded only in catching hold of one of her shoes. Her father had to be held back by force from following her; he was taken home a raving lunatic. But the bell—was perfect. And, when, later, it was hung up and rang out clearly for the first time, the Emperor stood by to listen to its deep, rich tone. All were horror-stricken when, after the heavy clank of the tongue as it struck the thick wall of metal had died away, came a low wail as of a girl in agony, distinctly saying the word "hsieh"—shoe. And to this day people when they hear it, say, "there's poor Ko-ai's voice calling out for her shoe."

15. The Hou-Men (後門) is the northern entrance to the Imperial City, and from the northern districts of the Tartar City is generally chosen as the most direct route to the Legation quarter, as it leads through very open thoroughfares following the wall of the Meishan and the Forbidden City Hill on the right; a drive, full of interest in the life of the people seen on every side.

16. The Coal Hill (Meishan) 景山 Ching Shan or 煤山 Mei Shan situated to the north of the Forbidden City in a small park-like enclosure, is an artificial mound which, in the great work of laying out the Imperial and Forbidden Cities, and planning their extensive ornamental waters, moats, &c., was originally formed by piling up the earth thus excavated. The reason for this particular site being chosen was on account of its supposed geomantic influence on the near palaces and their royal surrounding.

It dates back to the Mongol period, Thirteenth Century (Yuen dynasty), and it is generally believed that large quantities of coal were buried beneath the surface as a preparation for any future troublous times should they occur during the very cold winters. The five grand pavilions and other shrines were built some centuries later by the Emperor Kait-sing (1522-67). The centre square pavilions is the highest, roofed with tiles of Imperial yellow, faced with green, and contains an enormous idol. Next, on either side, came two smaller pavilions, roofed in green, faced with yellow. The two end pavilions are circular, tiled in a dark shade of peacock blue. On the other side of the hill to the north, also in the enclosure are well-kept grass meadows, facing the Hall of Longevity where the royal remains are always placed awaiting some propitious day for interment. There is a portrait here of the Emperor Kang-hsi, Ming dynasty (1425), which in itself commands special reverence and respect.

The Tragic End of the Mings.

The closing chapter of the great Ming dynasty legendary though it may seem, is one of special note and interest in the history of the Empire. The last Min-Emperor's name was Chung-Chen, and, although seventeen sovereigns of the dynasty had controlled the destinies of the Empire for nearly three centuries, there came a time when the ever-successful "rod of iron" had, by force of the inevitable, to supersede the milder forms of a cultured administration. The Emperor Chung-Chen was a humane and highly-cultured man who did all that he possibly could for the benefit of his subjects; in fact he tried in every way to raise the standard of morals, hoping by this means to subdue the restless, rebellious spirit which of late years had been showing itself in different parts of the country. Beyond the simple home troubles was the expected Manchu invasion, and his only General was away in the north with his army of bow-men endeavouring to arrest the southern march of these Manchu hordes. At last, on finding that the tide of events was going against him on every side, he is reported to have gone to the Sau-Kwan-Miao to consult with the gods as to how he had best face the rapidly accumulating difficulties. The usual ceremonies having been gone through, sacrifice offered, incense burnt, &c., it was considered advisable to try the Chim-quai-Seung, which is a lottery of the some-what extraordinary "bamboo fortune-box" description.

Into a bamboo cylinder forming a box 10 inches deep are placed a lot of pieces of split bamboo varying in length each having a character written on one end. These are then shaken so violently that one piece of the bamboo gradually shows itself above the others, and ultimately drops out on to the ground. The character on this piece of bamboo is noted and finally compared with a book to which it has special reference. In this book is contained the good or bad omen, as the case may be, which the bamboo-fortune-stick had decreed.

In the Emperor's case, if he succeeded in ejecting a long bamboo it would mean success, a middle lot would mean patience, whereas a short one would denote utter ruin, in which latter case he had decided to destroy himself rather than suffer at the hands of the invaders.

The bamboo cylinder containing the fortune-telling sticks was placed in his hands. The Emperor shook violently, one falling out from the rest. Amidst a dead silence the priest raised it, handing it to the Emperor. It was a short stick. No one dared to break the silence until the Emperor dashed the slip to the ground, exclaiming:—

"May the temple built by my ancestors evermore be accursed.
Henceforth may every suppliant be denied what he entreats.
Those that come in sorrow—may their sorrow be doubled;
In happiness—may that happiness be changed to misery;
In hope—may they meet despair; in health—sickness;
In the pride of life and strength death.

I, Chung-Chen, the last of the Mings, curse it."

He went at once back to the palace and to the apartments of the Empress, and the next morning they were both found hanging from a tree on the Coal Hill. The rebels took possession of the city and made their leader Emperor for a few days, when they were driven out by the Chinese assisted by the Manchus, who there and then seated themselves on the throne which they held until February, 1912.

Chung-Chen was the last of the Mings, as he had said, and 200 years afterwards people still pass the deserted temple shuddering, "It is the accursed temple."

During the siege of 1900 it was from the Coal Hill that the beautiful Peitang Cathedral, under the west wall of the Imperial City, suffered bombardment, the range being about 1,200 yards and the Boxers having mounted one gun of a somewhat primitive description. The grounds surrounding the hill are about one-third of a mile in extent, but at present the public are not allowed to enter.

17. The High Pink Wall and Moat of the Forbidden City can only be seen and inspected at a distance from the outside whilst driving or riding in ricksha.

It is a formidable wall, 30 feet high and 30 feet thick a perfect wall of "exclusion," and "seclusion" and for many generations has been the means of isolating this vast Empire from the outer world, depriving it of its proper place in the World's National Family History.

It was only in recent years that the entertainment of Foreign Ministers and their Staffs, in a very modest fashion, became an occasional Court function.

18. The Tesheng Men (得勝門) is one of the two northern entrances to the Tartar City, and, differing from all the other gates, it does not open direct on to any of the main thoroughfares within. There are several big temples and residences of princes in this neighbourhood, but nothing of special interest to the visitor.

19. The Mausoleum of an Imperial Princess passed on the left is a walled-in group of buildings just beyond the Te-sheng-Men. To the right an extensive reed-pond, about half a mile long, will be noticed under the Tartar Wall, which in time of need helps to flood the moat.

As there are a number of royal ancestral tombs of much more importance, it is not necessary to stop for the inspection of this one.

20. The Yellow Temple (黃宮 Hwang Kung) situated due north of the city, about a mile from the An-ting-Men, is another Lama temple, and dates back to the Seventeenth Century, when the place was handed over to this sect of the religious order by the Emperor Kang-hsi. There are really two temples, and the Emperor Chien-lung had one of them repaired for the special entertainment of the Mongol princes who arrived annually at the capital for the purpose of offering tribute.

At that period, from its huge dimensions and symmetrical proportions, with its entrance, which is really majestic in its general effect, this place has been described as one of the handsomest edifices in the Empire.

This was the celebrated factory in former days for the manufacture of gilded idols which, as part of the propaganda, formed an article of commerce amongst the Mongols, Tibetans, and the wild tribes of the Steppes. If report be true, not many years back a huge image of Buddha, 80 feet high, left this factory in pieces by camel caravan for some Lama temple bordering on the northern slopes of the Himalayas.

In the earlier days of idolatrous worship this was a very industrious community, and even to-day the attention of the Lamas is turned to the manufacture of metal vases for cloisonné ware.

It is here also that, during the Eighteenth Century, the beautiful monument in white marble was erected by the Emperor Chien-lung, in memory of the Dalai Lama, who was on a visit from Thibet and who unfortunately met his death by small-pox. On the panels of this monument are described many experiences during his life, including the miraculous circumstances of his birth. The work of the native sculptor has been wonderfully executed, and it well deserves to be ranked as the finest monument in the neighbourhood of the Great Capital.

The Mongol traders, who bring in their skins and other produce of the plains during the winter months, are in the habit of making their obeisance to this temple in the shape of small silk handkerchiefs, which they deposit in different nooks and corners of the grand pavilion. Simple as such offerings may seem, they are made with the utmost sincerity. During the troubles of 1900 this temple was occupied by a certain section of the allied forces, and since the departure of troops there has been a want of energy on the part of the custodians to keep the place up to its former standard of both cleanliness and excellence. It seems to be rapidly falling into decay.

21. The Altar of Earth. (地壇廟 Ti Tan Miao)—Second in importance only to the Altar of Heaven, representing a very ancient ritual dating back to a period long anterior to the birth of Sakayamuni, the master hand in the early propagation of Buddhism, as also to that of the much venerated Lao-tse of the Seventh Century B.C., who created a revival of Taoism, which cult, long before Buddhism was thought of, had been plunged deep down into the abyss of superstition.

This altar dates from the Mongol period, but was rebuilt early in the last century by the Emperor Kaizing (1796-1821) of the last dynasty.

There are two terraces, the upper one 60 feet, and the lower 106 feet square, the upper being about six feet above the lower.

The aspect is a northern one, the altar being approached by eight steps. There is also a grand pavilion in the usual Imperial yellow tiles, where the Emperor was formerly robed for the ceremonies.

The place is surrounded by a moat eight feet wide, and is constructed principally of white marble, all the shrines being in the Imperial yellow, which forms a very delicate but pretty contrast.

The Emperor, attended by his high officials, worshipped in this temple at the summer solstice, animals being sacrificed as at the Temple of Heaven.

22. The Hsichih-Men (西直門) is the north-western gate of the Tartar City, leading to the Peking-Nankow Kalgan Railway Station, which is just outside the Tartar Wall to the right, also the direct road to the Summer Palace and Zoological Pleasure Gardens; it is forty minutes' drive from the Legation quarter.

23. The Great Bell Temple is situated to the north-west of the Tartar City, and was built towards the end of the Eighteenth Century by the Emperor Yung-Chen for the purpose of accommodating one of the big bells which was cast by order of the Emperor Yung-loh (1403-1425), as described in the account of the Bell Tower.

This Great Bell is considered to be of much finer workmanship in its finished decoration and chasing than that of the Bell Tower. On the inside are many inscriptions consisting of extracts from Buddhist works. It is erroneously said to be the only surviving bell out of the five. Its measurements are given as 17 feet in height, 34 feet to its greatest circumference; its walls eight inches in thickness, and its weight 87,000 lbs. Instead of being hung, as is usual, in a tower, this monster is supported by very thick beams, and to enable it to speak earth has been removed from below so that the full volume of sound is greatly suppressed. It has no tongue, but is struck with a thick piece of pine wood suspended from above.

The Imperial Summer Palace (萬壽山) Wan-Shau-Shan.

24. The Summer Palace (萬壽山 Wan-Shau-Shan).—The original conception of a luxurious palatial residence amidst the hills and dales and fragrant streams of the countryside, where the jasmine, the tea rose and the purple peony, amongst many other flowering shrubs and plants, contribute in suffusing the mellow atmosphere with their delightful perfume; where Nature, transformed and richly clothed by Art, has become more winning to the eye; the original idea of all this splendour belongs to the Emperor Kanghsi, 1662-1723, of the Ta-tsing dynasty.

BRIDGE AT THE SUMMER PALACE

This Emperor, specially noted for his appreciation of the beautiful, built a summer residence which he called Chang Chuen Yuan (the garden of perpetual spring) where, after attending to all his Court functions, receiving Ambassadors, Legates and the Envoys sent from distant lands, he was able to spend the rest of the day in peace and quietness. To the north this royal country residence, distant about one li, there was at that period another garden known as Yuen Ming Yuen, a name given to it by the same Emperor, who, towards the end of his reign presented the beautiful place to his son, Yang Cheng, destined in due course to become his successor. Later during the reign of Chien-lung, 1736—1796, these two royal residences were connected and made into one palace, the name of Yuen Ming Yuen being retained.

ARCH AT THE SUMMER PALACE

The Emperor Chien-lung being desirous of obtaining the very best and not feeling quite confident of himself and his ability, took counsel with his Ministers, inviting also the Catholic Fathers of the period, with a view to obtaining plans of western design to enable him to proceed more successfully with the work of his life's ambition. This was accomplished, and from drawings prepared by Frère Castiglione, under the direction of Père Bevoit several pavilions in European style were built. Frère Atteret, in a letter dated 1743, gives many interesting details, speaking of the place as a "real earthly Paradise," but concluding his glowing description with the following summing up:—

(Translation.)

"There is but one being here and that being is the Emperor. All this preparation is made for him and him alone. This superbly beautiful mansion is rarely seen but by him and his. It is seldom he admits beyond the entrance of these palaces and gardens either princes, nobility or gentry."

The good Father Beviot also wrote from Peking, 1767, nearly 150 years ago, the following:—

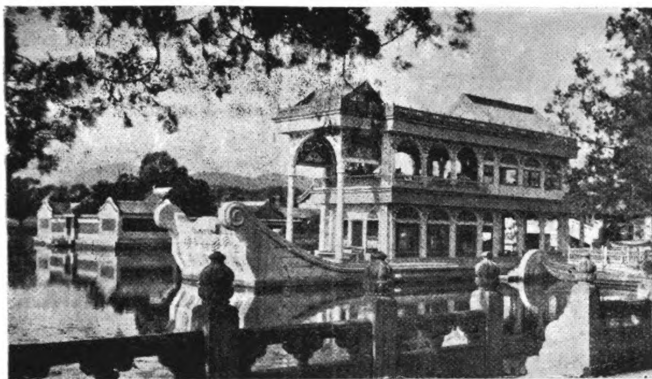

"Six miles from the Capital the Emperor has country residence where he spends a lot of his time working continually to further embellish the place.

"To form any idea of its beauty, one must drift into the regions of fairyland, such as described by certain imaginative writers. Artificial mountains with miniature canals passing over rocks and forming rapids into lakes dotted with islands of proportionate size. Intricate pathways winding in and out amongst the mountains, miniature canals and lakes, leading up to palaces decorated with the best that the world contains in luxury and art. Cleverly contrived summer houses, like fairly palaces, filling secluded nooks in the hills and valley and on the shores of the lake. Fountains also were to have been added to this magnificent miniature spectacle, but for this addition no provision had been made . . . all this for the sole use of the Emperor and his Court."

The palace of Yuen Ming Yuen was destroyed by the British and French in 1860, which much-to-be-regretted circumstance, owing to a procrastinating obstinacy, became necessary in making a demonstration against the Capital for the purpose of obtaining ratification of the Treaty of Tientsin and a due adherence to its provisions.

The plans and architectural designs of the remarkable group of buildings which constitute the present Wan-shou-Shan Palace are unique in every way.

This succession of handsome pavilions erected on the side of a hill (The-Hill-of-Ten-Thousand-Ages) rising uniformly tier upon tier mostly in pairs from the shores of a beautiful lake, varying both in form and size, all having the curiously-shaped pinnacle roofs with the extended up turned eaves as seen in temples and pagodas, some large others small, some round, others square, some even hexagon, until, in the centre, above and crowning all, is a magnificent octagon pavilion, the royal apartments occupied by the Emperor himself only—when in residence, which was seldom.

This is the Imperial Summer Palace, with its surrounding appointments, erected on an exceptionally wide terrace supported by a massive granite retaining wall and approached over by two flights of one hundred steps, having a high protecting screen on the outer side.

The gaudy colouring of this extensive landscape facade is more than difficult to describe. In a setting of many rich shades of green produced by the surrounding foliage there is an abundant tracery of virgin gold, relieved by a blending of all the colours of the rainbow, the impression being that of "eternal sunshine." The roofs of all the buildings, as also a great many of their ornamentations, are in costly enamelled tiles, Imperial yellow, chrome green, magenta and purple, which, glistening as they do in sunlight, produce a very startling effect.

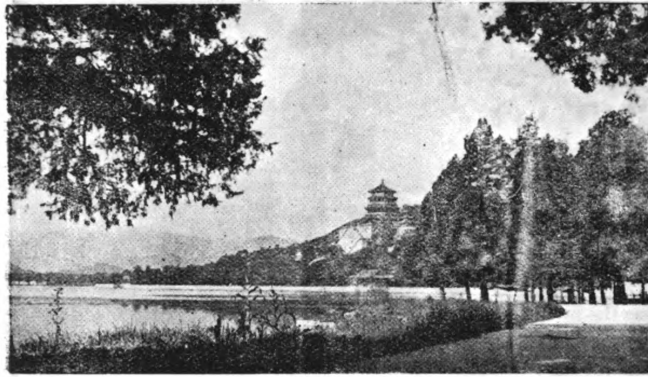

SUMMER PALACE

The best view of this charming palatial retreat is to be obtained from the island near the middle of the great lake or on the barge while crossing over to that island. On a bright sunny morning the entrancing beauty of the scene is most striking, both as regards its peculiar design and extraordinarily rich colouring. The situation at once lends itself to surroundings, the reflection in the great lake assisting the perspective of the many groups of grotesquely formed pavilions, towering high up above one another, which by themselves would look anything but pleasing. The White marble junk, camel-back bridge, and the long tout ensemble, giving to the beautiful lake-scene the necessary finishing touch.

Yü Chuan Shan (玉泉山)

25. Yu-Chuan-Shan—At a short distance from the Wan-shou-Shan Place is the Yu-Chuan-Shan, the "Hill of the Jadestone Fountain," rising from a miniature park prettily laid-out in the usual Chinese style. Here, from a rocky crevice in the side of the hill there flows a crystal spring of cold water, from which the mountain takes its name. This is the main source of the ornamental waters of Wan-shou-Shan, and also for the canals and lakes of the Imperial and Tartar Cities, eight miles distant. The most striking object in the surroundings is a lofty marble pagoda, which greatly contributes to the beauty of the landscape.

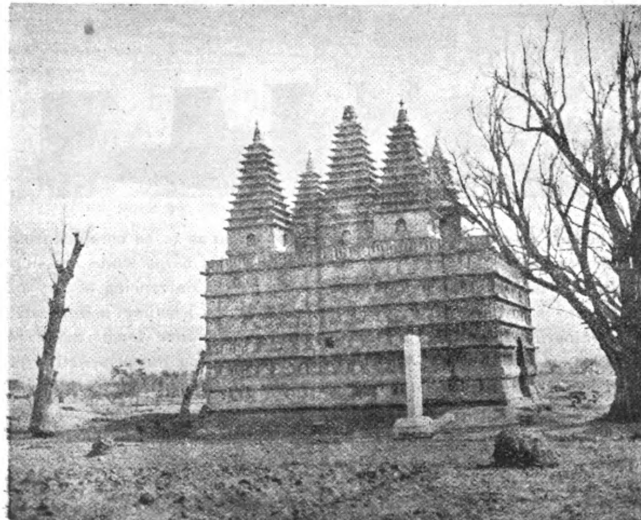

YU-CHUAN-SHAN

On this hill there are some fine temples, the most important being the Pi-yun-Su. Through the grounds of this temple, directly from a sulphur spring deep down in the earth, flows a clear stream of water which, after being allowed to pursue its meandering course some distance for ornamental purposes, is controlled, its volume bursting forth from a fountain in the form of a sculptured stone dragon's mouth. Here, both pilgrims to the different shrines in the temple as well as visitors to the place, may obtain a cool refreshing draught.

In this temple are to be seen the images of 500 Buddhist saints heavily gilded and arranged in a hall containing aisles specially planned for their reception. At the back of the building outside is a terrace where there are steps leading on to the top, from which elevation a fine view of the great Oriental capital with its massive walls and pagoda gateways, places, temples, &c., is to be had.

26. From this point is also obtained a general view over the Wan-shou-Shan Palace, grounds, and ornamental lake, and YUEN-MING-YUEN (Round the Splendid Garden) with its now modern historical ruins. This park is a magnificent enclosure having an area of a little over one square mile, containing wonderful groves of fine old trees, beautiful ornamental waters, palaces, pavilions, pailows, temples, avenues, &c. This was the famous royal residence, the designs for which, during the Emperor Kien lung's reign were entrusted to the Roman Catholic Fathers, and, as will be noticed, are, like Versailles, partly in the style of French renaissance, great ability being shown in the blending so as to retain Oriental character.

FIVE-STOREY PAGODA

The place suffered much at the hands of the rebels in 1900.

27. The Temple of the Five Pagodas or Wu-ta Szu, (五塔寺) is situated to the north-west of the Tartar City, about one mile outside the Hsieh-Men. It dates back five centuries and was built by the Emperor Yung-loh. It is a very remarkable edifice, and at the same time possesses a beauty distinct from anything yet visited. Its design would appear to be after the grouped form of the Indian Ghauts. A high marble terrace decorated with innumerable figures, supported by a square mass of masonry, and surmounted by five minature pagodas, each of eleven stories. Besides, in the front is a very beautiful square pagoda. Its origin, the legend says, is that "Five centuries ago, a Hindoo from Lower Bengal came with presents to the Emperor Cheng-kwa in the shape of five idols, gilt images of Buddha, and a small model of a diamond throne, and as a special mark of appreciation of this kindness, the Five Pagoda Temple was erected, out of courtesy, in partly Indian style."

28. The Zoological and Botanical Gardens (農事試驗廠 Nung Szu Shih Yen Chang) adjoining, connected by a succession of bridges, known also as the Afternoon Resort, when the weather is fine, of the Manchu and Chinese aristocracy, are situated to the north west, outside the Hsichih-Men, nor far from the Temple of the Five Pagodas.

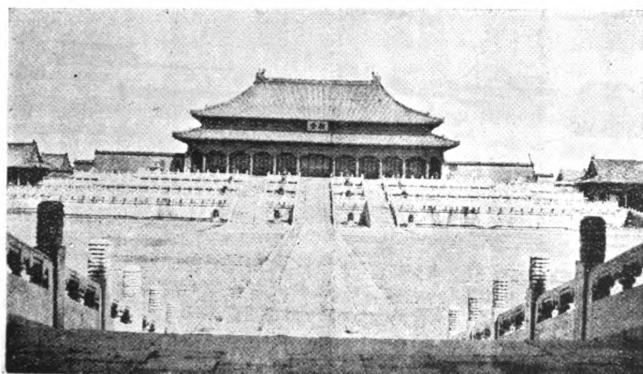

In the warmer season it is a pleasant way to spend the afternoon, arriving at the gardens not later than four o'clock, when the native society belles vieing with each other in every possible way, as the fairest of fair charmers, begin to muster. There are a few cages in the gardens containing animals, and the laying out and decorations of the place are unique, forming quite a grand display.

First-class native restaurants are to be found in these gardens, where tiffin and afternoon tea are served. An hour can very well be spent here, leaving for the hotel not later than half-past five. The return trip is made through the Hsichih-Men, leading into the Imperial City, with the Peitang Roman Catholic Cathedral on the left and the extensive ornamental lake some distance ahead.

29. The Hsi-an-Men (西安門) is the main entrance through the western walls of the Imperial City, and leads into the most interesting part of this select Oriental metropolis. On passing through the gateway two Catholic Cathedrals are visible, the Peitang to the left, and the old Cathedral a short distance ahead on the right. This latter, in exchange for another site (the Peitang) and a sum of money as compensation, had to be given up some years ago because the late Empress Dowager objected to the palace grounds being overlooked; after the late Emperor Kwang-Hsu came of age and occupied the throne, it was her rule to spend a lot of her time in the gardens.

Besides the old Cathedral a small palace close by, known as the Winter Palace, is well worth a visit, although a certain part of its beauty was destroyed during 1900, when occupied by the Commander-in-Chief of the Allied Forces. Close to the marble bridge is a grand pavilion, the Tuan Cheng, surrounded by a wall where the Emperor Chien-lung placed a very old dark green jade vase of considerable size for use as an aquarium in which to keep goldfish. In this pavilion there is a handsome throne, and in 1893 several of the European Ambassadors were here given audience. It was also used on special occasions when the Emperor had to go into mourning.

30. The Pei-t'ang Roman Catholic Mission Cathedral, (北堂) a most striking edifice with its twin spires, will be found a short distance from the Hsi-an-Men. Catholic Missions have been resident in Peking for several centuries. This Mission is a prosperous one and controls an extensive printing establishment, an orphanage, an industrial institution for girls, and a technical school for young men, as well as a valuable museum by the former traveller and explorer, Abbié A. David.

PALACE IN FORBIDDEN CITY

31. The Imperial City (皇城 Hwang Cheng).—The Marble Bridge is a span of seven arches across the narrow water which connects the northern with the middle ornamental lake, and forms the centre of a succession of pretty landscapes, unique as they are grotesquely picturesque. This is the most interesting, as it is the most fascinating corner of Peking, and will compare favourably with such precincts of High Imperialism to be found anywhere else in the world. The clear waters of the two beautiful lakes, extending for nearly a mile north and south, with wooded islands on which the yellow tiled pinnacle roofs of miniature palaces, temples, shrines, and other pavilions lend a sort of fantastic charm to the scene, faintly recall one of Shakespeare's pictured haunts of "Oberon in Fairyland."

32. The Imperial City.—The White Marble Dagoba is situated on the top of a pretty green hill to the left of the marble bridge; it stands out so prominently that it can be seen from almost any part of the city walls. On the slopes below the base are innumerable shrines, summer-houses, and small pavilions, all very gay in the bright enamelled tiles used for building. The island is connected with the palace grounds by two ornamental bridges having a white marble balustrade which extends some distance along the shores of the lake.

It was the Emperor Tien-Min of the last dynasty who built this dagoba early in the Seventeenth Century, intending it as a shrine for a very beautiful Buddha. There is a small bronze pagoda in front containing a hideous bronze idol wearing a necklace of skulls.

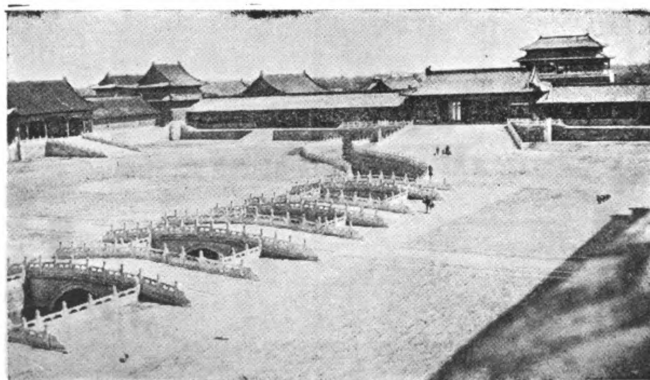

PALACE IN FORBIDDEN CITY

The white marble dagoba was regarded as the palladium of the Empire and occupies an important central position amidst its peaceful surroundings.

On the side of the hill below is an altar to the original inventor of silk spinning and weaving and the cultivation of silk-worms. In close proximity will be found mulberry cultivation, and a tank of fresh water for cleansing the worms. As the Emperor visited the Hall of Agriculture every spring, so it was the duty of every royal mistress at the proper season to visit this altar, personally, and to attend to silk culture, thereby setting an example to her subjects, whose duty, we are told in the Fourth Book for Girls, is to:—

Run the reel and loom with easy gentle motion
Boil cocoons and watch the silk-worms, morn and even with devotion;
Gather mulberry and oak leaves,
Both from wind and rain protect them,
Keep them warm in cold, damp weather, and from odors disinfect them,
Always at the proper season;
Feed with leaves both fresh and green, when, silk for warp and woof.
Will both in changs and webs be seen.

MARBLE BRIDGES IN FORBIDDEN CITY

On the lake shore at a short distance will be found the most beautiful pailow in Peking, constructed principally of encaustic tiles, selected in their colour blends to produce a sort of prismatic effect. Close by, again, but in a retired nook behind the hillock, is a magnificent dragon screen, 60 feet long by 20 feet high, a perfect marvel in its contribution to the many beauties of the spot: the reflected colouring of the three pairs of monster dragons, red, blue and gold, all in high relief, producing additional wonder.

33. The Ta-Kao-Tien (Temple of Prayer for Rain) is on the north of the Forbidden City, its main entrance facing the most immediately outside the Meishan enclosure. There are three entrances, all wonderful exhibitions of architecture and very beautiful. Those of the east and west are approached through gorgeous Paifangs, whilst that in the south is supported on either side by two circular pavilions with many receding eaves which go to form the roof, tiled in the Imperial yellow. The effect is very striking. In front of each entrance is an upright marble slab on which it is indicated that a proper respect and reverence for the sacred precincts must be shown by all visitors. The principal idol is Yu-huang-ti, the god of rain, to whom the Taoist priests from the Kwang-Mun-Tien make obeisance periodically every year. In the rear of the principal pavilion is another circular temple, roofed in blue enamelled tiles, similar to the Temple of Heaven. This place dates back to the Ming dynasty, and neither priests nor Lamas reside within its walls.

34. Shopping.—Silverware in great variety of curious design, may be found in some of the smaller streets off the Great Chien Men Street; but, as an industry, it is not so well developed in Peking as it is in the southern cities of Canton and Foochow, where the workmanship is very much superior.

Bronzes and brassware are to be found distributed in nearly every direction over the native quarters, but there are some reliable dealers in the Great Chien Men Street near the five monumental arches. It would be difficult to attempt any description or to offer any advice respecting the selection or purchase of these articles, as they belong so completely to the individual taste of those who desire to procure them.

Paintings.—Strange as it may seem, the Chinese have been admirers of the artistic merits of both brush and crayon for many centuries, and their records show that as far back as the Third and Fourth Century A.D., there were celebrated painters.

Tsao Fu Gsing, Third Century;
Ko Hoi Chi, Fourth Century;
Lu Tan Wei, Fourth Century;
Chang Seong Yu, Sixth Century;

besides a host of others following every reign in succession, until at the present time they are to be found all over the country. As with many of these old art curios, it is not possible to describe nor give advice on the subject of pictures. Appreciation must alone rest with the purchaser.

Oriental rugs made of camel's hair, or sometimes of very coarse wool, will be found in a number of shops both on the Hata Men and in the Great Chien Men Street. In the winter they are very much in demand, being so very thick and warm. Special sizes can be made to order.

35. Beautifully executed paintings in oil, portraits of royalty and officials, ministers, &c., in their court robes, can be procured in the LU-LI-CHANG off Chien Men Street, where there are several artists of distinction. They will be packed ready for sending away by the vendor.

36. Bazaars. The Tung-an-shih-chang Market is one huge bazaar open all the year round, exhibiting a great variety of native handicraft, both useful and ornamental. It is situated on the street which was a continuation of Customs Street, close to the East Catholic Church near the Imperial City Gate Tung-an Men.

A wonderful collection of knick knacks, in themselves curiosities, can be obtained here for a very small outlay. Besides the bazaar will be seen many new phases of native life in the shape of marionette shows, "Punch and Judy," &c., from London, Chinese jugglers, itinerant acrobats, and many groups of "strolling companies," who make their living with their performing bears, sheep, goats, dogs, cats and monkeys, wandering all over the country. Every Chinese city has its bazaar, which, if not open all the year round, is always a profitable place to visit about Chinese New Year time, when many good things are exhibited for sale, the money being required to effect the yearly balancing. On New Year's Eve, towards sundown everything on sight is offered at a clearing price.

37. Fairs are held in different parts of the city nearly every day in the month as follows:—

On the 4th, 14th, and 24th outside the Hata Men.

On the 9th, 19th, 20th, 29th, and 30th in the East Ssu-pai-lo.

On the 8th, 9th, 18th, 19th, 28th, and 29th at the Hu-kuo-ssu on the north west of the Tartar City.

On the 1st and 15th at Tung-yu Miao.

They consist of collections of native useful articles in one section, with a fancy stall or two of curios and articles which come mostly from the pawnshops—unredeemed pledges. Sometimes it is possible to get really good embroideries and old porcelain at these variety shows.

Old coins (copper) will be found in little lots on nearly every stall where curios are shown; spurious imitations being common, the coins should be examined very carefully before closing the purchase.

Shop Signboards.—A collection of small coloured signboards, in exact facsimile of those which meet the eye hanging lengthways from the sides of the shops, can be procured in Lantern Street, where also a great assortment of fans is to be found.

Red Lacquer.—This is a very attractive form of art production and one highly prized by collectors, sometimes even valuable, according to the richness of the carving. Lacquer is used in the making of all sorts of articles, from the miniature snuff-bottle weighing a couple of ounces up to the incense burner standing several feet high. The process of manufacture is a simple one. First of all a pattern to form a base of whatever is required is prepared in soft wood, allowing for the substance of lacquer intended to be used, then the lacquering begins until, in a clumsy form, the coatings are sufficiently thick to admit of being carved to the required design without the wood base showing through. It takes, sometimes, where the lacquering is very thick, several months to produce a single piece. Lacquer is prepared from a kind of shellac rendered ductile by the adding of certain vegetable gums. It is very brittle, and will not stand much hard usage.

38. Theatres are to be found in the busiest parts of the city, and can be visited almost during any hour of the day, as the performance is continuous. The most convenient are close to the Chien-Men; ricksha coolies know them. Chinese plays, whether modern drama or ancient historical tragedy, last, as a rule, for many days and nights, sometimes weeks, and relays of actors are provided all the time.

39. To the Ming Tombs and the Great Wall.—Write to the Manager of the Railway or Ching Er Hotel, Nankow, to secure mountain chairs with four coolies each to meet your train, also to reserve necessary sleeping accommodation for one night (donkeys are also to be had, but only provided with native saddles). Leave Peking, Hsichih-Men Station (on the north-west of the city outside the wall, 50 minutes by ricksha, two coolies, or hotel carriage) by the 8.50 A.M. train for Nankow, arriving there at 10.38 A.M. make a start with as little delay as possible for the Ming Tombs (Shih-san Ling) nearly seven miles away over a somewhat difficult country. In about two hours the approach to the Holy Way will be seen in the distance through a magnificent five span pailow, a monumental archway, built of pure white marble with a beautifully sculptured facade some 50 feet high by at least 75 feet wide. These pailows as monuments were only allowed by special permission of the Emperor, and very rarely exceed three spans. The one in view is said to be the finest known in the Empire. It is certainly the most imposing as a handsome structure.

MING TOMBS. TRIUMPHAL ARCH

The Taching Men, the real entrance to the Holy Way, as will be understood by the inscription over the centre, which demands that all should show a pious respect and reverence for the holy precincts, is yet a considerable distance off. And there is also a small double-eaved pavilion having four open porch entrances formed by its wonderfully thick walls, with four beautifully-sculptured stone columns surmounted by a representative in white marble of some fabulous animal in support. This pavilion is said to contain a monument to Yung-loh, third Emperor of the Mings, upon whose tablet within, resting on a huge stone tortoise, the Emperor Chien-lung inscribed a poem. Having inspected this tablet, the Holy Way comes next, with its stately lines of stone mourners facing each other grouped in two.

Two columns Sexagon form, double capitols, decorated sculptured clouds.

3 Arches of a white marble causeway (much destroyed) leading to the Mausoleum.

Having completed the inspection of the very elaborate approach to the mausoleum, continue on through a handsome stone division known as the Lung-kwa-Men from the openings of which a good general view of the Avenue of Mourning Statuary, standing out well on the plain, can be obtained: the more distant landscape being very interesting. Proceeding, a marble causeway, originally of five spans, three of which only remain, should point to the continuation of the Holy Way, but there would appear to have been so much wanton destruction that the true direction is to-day hardly traceable.

From this point the correct path is somewhat difficult to follow, being much overgrown with wild fruit bushes, and in some cases, even brought under grain cultivation. In the far distance the tomb of Yung-loh can now be discerned situated amidst a grove of cypresses.

There, again, is another pavilion, containing a tablet of great size resting on the back of some antediluvian animal. Immediately in the rear of this is the Ling-ngan-Men (Rest the Spirit Entrance), approached by marble steps with a balustrade bearing carved decorations in the familiar Chinese style of imagery, clouds, winged fabula and dragons. Producing a pleasing effect, the setting is amidst innumerable well-grown oak and fir trees, there being many little shrines and incense burners erected all in the bright Imperial yellow enamelled bricks and tiles. Beyond this will be seen the principal pavilion, a grand hall 200 feet long by nearly 100 feet wide, supported by solid teak wood pillars of extraordinary dimensions, 60 feet high by 4 feet in diameter. At the back of this pavilion, passing through another quadrangle, a passage is visible, which, it is believed, leads to the real entrance to the tomb. This passage, at the end of a rather steep ascent either to the right or left and suddenly rounding another corner terminates on a wide terrace with an upper pavilion in ruins. Occupying considerable space here, there is another huge tablet, originally red, inscribed "The Tomb of Chen-Tsu-Wen-Hwang-ti" ("The Perfect Ancestor and Literary Emperor"). Having inspected the immediate surroundings, a very expansive view over the whole countryside is not to be forgotten, when an early resumption of the chairs for the journey back to Nankow is recommended so as to save as much daylight as possible, the state of the roads making it altogether undesirable for travel after dark.

40. The Great Wall of China.—The Great Wall, so far as reliable records exist, dates back to a remote period centuries prior to the Christian Era. It was commenced by the Emperor Chin-shih-Hwang-ti, about B.C. 200. Its extraordinary dimensions, allowing for gateways and watch towers, which latter occur every Chinese li (600 yards), being higher and wider than the wall itself, are:—

Height (average), including foundations 27 feet.

Width " " " 30 "

Length, from Shan-hai-kwan to Suchoo, on the western borders of Mongolia 2,500 miles.

Thus it will be seen that the superficial contents of a section face is 90 square yards, or, cubed, about 85 English tons, giving 375,000,000 tons measurement of actual material used in the construction.

GREAT WALL OF CHINA-NANKOW PASS

At the Nankow Pass, the foundations and about ten feet of the superstructure are of dressed granite blocks, measuring three Chinese feet—a Chinese foot being equal to 14 inches (English)—which would give their weight approximately at a quarter of a ton each. Millions of these granite blocks must have been quarried and dressed. The upper structure and battlements are of sun dried bricks nearly four times the size of ordinary housebuilding bricks.

Excursion from Nankow.

Rise at 4.30 o'clock, having ordered breakfast the night before for 5 a.m. to enable you to catch the goods train, which is timed to leave Nankow at 5.30 a.m. for the village of Ching-lung Chiao, the terminus, riding in the break van on a ticket issued by the guard at 65 cents for the single journey.

The Nankow Pass, as it is called, is a little more than eleven miles by rail to its head, which is at an altitude of something like 1,900 feet above Nankow, the gradient being very steep, averaging 1 in 30 feet, and requiring huge, specially-constructed locomotives to negotiate the stiff gradient. At many convenient points over the line there are safety sidings.

This eleven mile trip, taking just one hour and fifteen minutes by the early morning train, is a delightful one; the scenery strangely wild in character, the air fresh with the perfume of a mountain vegetation in which many of our home varieties are distinctly noticeable—wild hyacinth, violets, honeysuckle, clover, buttercups, and the Scotch thistle, this latter, like the donkeys, being apparently indigenous to the neighbourhood. Ching-lung Chiao station, quite recently completed, is in a little hollow just outside the Great Wall, a portion of which has had to be removed to make room for platform and sidings. For some few miles before reaching Ching-lung Chiao, both to the right and left many distant views are obtainable of the Great Wall, climbing mountains and dipping down into valleys at all sorts of impossible angles; then along ridges and over peaks hundreds of feet above, and as suddenly descending again almost to train level.

In the middle distance, as the train moves slowly up the Pass, the wall looks to be in a very good state of repair, its battlements standing out against the sky line and the square-castled watch towers at a distance of every one-third of a mile appearing in bold relief. On alighting from the train at Ching-lung Chiao, the station master, who speaks English, will direct you to the northern gateway, Pa-ta-ling, twenty minutes distant (7.30 a.m.) through which the Kalgan Kiakhta caravan road passes, the wall at this particular point being easily accessible. As a strange feature in the construction it will be noticed that the curtain in this case, instead of being an exterior one, is an interior one, so demanded by the difficult nature of immediate surroundings.

As the train back to Nankow does not leave Chinglung Chiao until 11. A. M. several hours can well be spent in doing this part of your trip thoroughly. And, it should be remembered that to see and to walk on the Great Wall of China—the noblest of tributes to an industrious and thrifty people who lived very many centuries ago, and, perhaps, the greatest artificial wonder the world can boast of—is a feat which only falls to the lot of the privileged few.

As to the return journey, the Peking train does not leave Nankow until 12.17, and by way of adding to the interest of the trip, if half-an-hour's inspection of the wall and the gateway is considered sufficient, it may be possible to hire donkeys at the village of Ching-lung Chiao for the ride down the pass over the old caravan road back to Nankow, which will furnish many interesting experiences such as could not possibly be had on the rail journey. By leaving the village of Ching-lung Chiao about 8 a.m., on donkeys or in chairs, you should reach Nankow by 11 a.m.

The Nankow Pass

The road leading to this ancient highway is through the main thoroughfare, about 25 feet wide, of the now rising township of Nankow. Nankow has become important only since the advent of the railway with its extensive engineering shops and construction plant, which have suddenly transformed a straggling agglomeration of dirty shanties, huddled together without the least regard to form or order, into a centre of activity demanding all the labour that formerly was occupied with the business of the caravan traffic and seasonable local agriculture. A typical Chinese frontier village of olden times, the place is quite interesting to pass through. The road leading from the railway station, although rather rough, is but a fair introduction to what may be expected to follow. From this road can be seen on the hills four watch towers looking like sentinels, two on either side of the Pass, which are able to hold communication by signal with the fortified walled city Chu-Yung-Kwan, six miles away.

The Life in the Pass

The Nankow Pass through the western hills has for untold ages been the great highway for all the caravan traffic from northern China to the various suzerain states—Mongolia, Tibet, Chinese Turkestan, Dzungaria, &c., and the many countries far beyond. Its great importance as a trade route can be traced back to the Han dynasty, 2,000 year ago, when the Empire was in the throes of sedition and conspiracy, which ultimately caused a division of the kingdom into three realms. History cannot be expected to furnish many details of the stirring scenes and events of that remote period, but, making the descent of the Pass either in chair or on donkey, a full opportunity will be afforded for most interesting investigation and conjecture.

About one-third of the way down will bring into view, on both sides of the Pass, a double wall rising to an apex at an elevation of several hundred feet up the steep mountain sides, with ruins of former fortifications and the scanty remains of a small township known as Chu-Yung-Kwan (Chai). This place formed the northern outpost, the first barrier protecting the Pass long before the wall and gateway beyond Chin-lung Chiao were completed. Here are several extensive caravansaries with ample yards for shelter both for camels, mules, horses, donkeys and drivers. A mile or so further down will be seen a much more formidable double wall, with great square-castled watch-towers also extending to an apex up the mountain side at a still greater elevation than the one previously noticed. This is the fortified city of Chu-Yung-Kwan with its celebrated marble gateway. This great stronghold or barrier of olden times with its outpost to the north, was supposed to be able to protect the Pass against all intruders. Chu-Yung-Kwan is a convenient place to halt for refreshments, and a stay of twenty minutes might be made there. If time allows, this curious old fortress should certainly be visited, as it dates back to the Fourteenth Century, its walls are in a remarkable state of preservation. But the marble gateway belonging to the Ming dynasty A.D. 1368—1644 with its arch 50 feet through, is, above all else, what the visitor must see and inspect most carefully. In the centre, on the southern face of the arch, will be found, in white marble, a bold sculptured design in complete bass-relief of a pigmy surrounded by fantastic decorations. Forming the sides in the archway white marble panels covered with exquisite pieces of sculpture, the figures being nearly life size, also in full bass-relief. These latter (securely protected from the elements) although five centuries old, are still in a very wonderful state of preservation. They might have been executed quite recently, except that all the features are not of modern facial expression.

Leaving Chu-Yung-Kwan, as the morning advances, the life of the Pass will become much more in evidence. Camels, donkeys, horses, cattle of various kinds, singly and in teams, all with their packs, or loads on two-wheeled Peking carts, carefully tended by sturdy drivers striding away at a swift gait, each carrying a long cracking whip, and using a most peculiar jargon which the animals seem quite to understand. Add to these the usual traffic of pedestrians, mule litters, primitive sedan chairs and occasional herds of long-haired shaggy, wildlooking black pigs, with sundry flocks of sheep and goats, all passing and repassing in both directions amidst some of the wildest bits of rugged mountain scenery for a setting, and you will only begin to faintly realise the many extraordinary but interesting features of one of Asia's ancient caravan routes—the Nankow Pass. And to think that this same life, according to record, has been going on steadily for more than twenty centuries, long before the barbarous natives of the West ever dreamt there was such a huge Empire as China!
